

This is a tree that's easily seen.
It looks like it forgot its sunscreen.
It's tall and orange and it's outside peels.
This is how a tourist feels.

They come in red, black, and white.
And can grow to an outrageous height.
Sometimes the roots grow facing down
And sometimes they grow up from the ground.

If you're one to enjoy hiking,
This loop should be to your liking.
It's in the north end of the Park
And provides enough shade so it's cool and dark.

Estuary, hammock, reef, and dune
Can all be found in a single room.
Learn about the species of the Park,
Or watch "Island in Time" in the dark.

Selfie Scavenger Hunt

If you need help completing this task,
do not be afraid to ask.

Our rangers really love to teach,
and remember to use #macarthurbeach.
Post on Facebook, Instagram, or Twitter.

Try to finish. Don't be a quitter.

If you get finished with this hunt today,
you'll be rewarded in the very best way.

We'll be sure to take your best photo and add it to a collage so everyone will know that you and your group are super smart,

and you really know

MacArthur Beach State Park.

If it's purple, make sure to look out.
There may be dangerous sea life about.
If it's green, conditions are fair.
And if its red, swim with care.

This is a peaceful place to sit,
and you're sure to see a jumping mullet.
Across the estuary, it's a third of a mile.
You can take a tram or stroll for a while.

Disney could have owned this land,
if it wasn't for this special man.
In 1980 it became a park,
where his legacy has clearly left a mark.

They're popular nesters at MacArthur Beach,
and we have two that are used to teach.
Their tracks look like giant apostrophes,
squirming up and down the sand from the seas.
